The minor child must be protected by its parents. Parental authority confers him rights and put at their load of the duties.

Who's the parental authority holder?

The parents exert in common the parental authority whatever their status, married or not, as soon as the child filiation is established.

If the parents are married:

-the 2 parents exert in common the parental authority.

If the parents are not married:

-the mother benefits from the child authority exercise

-the father gets right about the child only if he signed for it.

If the father signs form his child after one year old:

-the mother exerts alone the parental authority

-the father must request the attribution of the parental authority by a joint exercise parental authority (see procedure)

What's the content of the parental authority?

The parents must protect, maintain and ensure the education of the child until it becomes an adult.

They must take care of the material needs and moral of the child (feed it, lodge it, make medical decisions, look after its relationships and its moves...).

Each parent must contribute to maintenance the child depends on its resources and the ones from the other parent and the child needs.

Some obligations continue beyond the child majority, until its complete autonomy.

The parents must make sure that the child goes to school, from 6 to 16 years old. The parents who do not give the must instruction to the child expose themselves to penal sanctions.

In case of common joint exercise parental authority, only one parent can make, without asking the other parent's agreement, an identity card or a passport for its minor child,

Caution: In case of disagreement between the parents about a decision to make for the child interest, one of the two can seize a judge with family business.

Comment est exercée l'autorité parentale après la séparation des parents?

When parents break up (divorce, end of time living together, pacs dissolution) there is no incidence on the parental authority exercise. It remains an obligation for the parents even if they do not live together anymore.

Each parent must maintain personal links with the child.

Each parent must respect the other parent links with the child.

The parents can fix by mutual agreement the dwelling conditions and the child visit.

What to do in case of disagreement with the separated parents on the parental authority exercise?

If the parents cannot get on well about the right of visit and the child dwelling, it's necessary to seize the judge with family business who'll organize the parental authority exercise in the child interest.

The parental authority being shared with the two parents, a parent can't deprive the other of its right of visit, dwelling and the child education.

The judge will fix the living child place whether at one of the parents, whether at the two or at somebody else in the child interest.

The exercise of the right of visit and dwelling cannot be refused by the other parent, only for serious matters.

Each of the parents will have to respect the judge with family business decision, under sorrows of sanctions.
